About the Shinkansen

The Shinkansen, 'bullet train', is an important symbol of Japanese technology and innovation and runs along various lines connecting the country – from Hokkaido in the north to Kyushu in the south. The first generation 'Series 0' Shinkansen entered into service on the Tōkaidō Shinkansen line, which was launched just 10 days before the opening ceremony of the first Tokyo Olympic Games in October 1964 and was the world's first high-speed rail line. Since then, the Tōkaidō Shinkansen, connecting Tokyo with Kyoto and Osaka, has carried approximately 6.5 billion passengers.

The award-winning 'Series N700S' Shinkansen, running along the Tōkaidō and Sanyō Shinkansen lines, was introduced in July 2020. Running at 300 kph (186 mph), it has many cutting-edge features – including a more streamlined and lightweight design, superior noise reduction, and robust safety measures – making for a greener, smoother and safer journey for passengers.
